This reference textbook on International Law, published by Pedone Editore, provides a balanced and modern analysis of international law from both traditional and critical perspectives.

Written in French (but will be available in the future in Portuguese, Italian and English), the book is a systematic and balanced account of international law. It is written with great clarity and conciseness, being at the same time both approachable and authoritative. This book takes into great account the transnational character of contemporary International Law.

In the last decades, globalisation has gone beyond the boundaries of economic affairs and has modified the fundamental structure of the International Community. Today, even individuals and NGOs are at the origin of many rules which compete with the ones (traditionally created) by States and Intergovernmental organisations contributing significantly to shaping law making and law enforcement processes in the International legal system.
