The university and the city

Dublin is a cosmopolitan city with all the benefits of a capital, including museums, access to people in public life, academic, political and cultural events and, perhaps most famously, pubs, clubs and all forms of nightlife. It is relatively easy to get from Dublin to the surrounding country, which is both attractive and studded with significant historical and archaeological sites.

University College Dublin was founded over 150 years ago and today is the largest university in Ireland, attracting 22000 students from across Ireland and the globe. The academic year runs from September to June. The School of Politics and International Relations (SPIRe) is located in the main university campus, 4 kilometres from the city centre. The School is part of the College of Human Sciences. The research focuses of the School include human rights, development, international relations, citizenship, European governance and society and nationalism and ethno-communal conflict.
